

Colorado Evening Sky (Cedar Ridge Chronicles Book 4)

COLORADO EVENING SKY By A J Hawke Cedar Ridge Chronicles, Book 4
The year is 1890, and Thomas Black battles to survive another day. Convicted of cattle rustling at age 17, he has three years left on a 15-year sentence in the infamous Yuma Territorial Prison. Feeling abandoned even by his God, he must fight on occasion to stay alive. But, most of the time, he fights to forget his mothers tears and that he has nothing to show for his life except for a prison record, wasted years, and deep regrets. Catherine OMalley finds herself facing loneliness of another kind. She runs a little cafe on a dusty main street eight hundred miles away in Colorado. It is a hard time and place for a pretty, unmarried woman in her twenties to run a business. She longs for a family and a loving husband to protect her. Lives that couldnt be farther apart in social status, miles, and years are set on a collision course in book four of the Cedar Ridge Chronicles. With a prosperous suitor at her door, Catherine must make a decision that will alter the course of her life as well as the lives of others. Thomas must find a way to thwart a plot that threatens Catherine and send him back to prison.
