

Historical Memoir of the War in West Florida

Widely regarded as the best eyewitness account of the Battle of New Orleans, Arsène LaCarrière Latours Historical Memoir records first-hand the dramatic events of the climactic military campaign of the War of 1812. This revised and expanded edition includes a substantial new biographical introduction based on a group of manuscripts relating to the battle recently acquired from Latours descendants in France. Only months after the battle ended, Latour, who was General Andrew Jacksons principal army engineer, began interviewing witnesses and key participants in order to create a comprehensive record based on first-hand accounts. The works most significant value derives from these accounts---of numerous individuals who participated in a crucial moment in history of the United States---reproduced in the books appendix. As the first full-length treatment of the New Orleans campaign, the book also offers perceptive analysis of battle preparations, terrain, and strategy by the man who designed many of the American defenses. This new edition also includes nine three-color maps illustrating the course of the battle. Latour characterized it as a conflict, which preserved our country from conquest and desolation. As a key figure in the conflict who knew many of the other main actors and personally collected their reports and observations, Latour provides a record which will never be replaced.
